Jon Stiles is the Executive Director of the California Census Research Center and Director of Archive Services at the U.C. DATA archive at U.C. Berkeley. He received his Ph.D. in Sociology from U.C. Berkeley, and has research interests in educational and population dynamics, immigration, segregation, inequality and stratification, and transfer programs. He has been involved with evaluations of California's Cal-Learn program, examined impacts of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act (PRWORA) on immigrants' use of public assistance programs, created statistical profiles of Latino and Asian populations in California, and tracked changes in the American population throughout the course of the 20th century using decennial census data. Recent publications address biases in federal estimates of food stamp rates, the use and validation of survey-based and administrative reports of public assistance, patterns of segregation in metropolitan U.S. since 1960, and population changes and educational outcomes for California in the next 50 years. He has served supporting secondary data use at U.C. Berkeley since 1995, and is the campus representative for the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR), the Roper Center for Public Opinion Research, and the Census State Data Center network at U.C. Berkeley.
